

Black & White (nude) 2007

14th April - 27th April, 2007

Nudity in art has been depicted over centuries. The human body has been a subject of art since cave men were making sketches on walls, and our ancient civilisations were etching stories of their God's and their daily live's into the brickwork of their monuments and temples.

Nudity is still a major subject in art; it is us as we are.

"Black & White Nude" is an annual exhibition of fine art figure photography.

The images capture the beauty of human form and shape describing the body naked (full nude) or partially nude. The black and white photographs depict a sense of softness that compliments the nature and structure of human figure.

The 2007 exhibition includes works submitted by a number of local photographers as well as from interstate and New Zealand, bringing together a body of work showing the human figure from many different angles and in many different situations.
